

such as the European Union. It follows the creation of a web of political institutions: national,

CITY 7 such as the European Union. It follows the creation of a web of political institutions: national, international, regional, and local, that becomes the new operating unit of the information age: the network state.

supranational, international, regional, and local, that becomes the new operating unit of the information age: the network state.

The challenges to social domination in the network

such as the European Union. It follows the creation of a web of political institutions: national, supranational, international, regional, and local, that becomes the new operating unit of the information age: the network state.

proposing alternative meaning and changing the rules of the

domination in the network

society revolve around the redefinition of cultural codes, proposing alternative meaning and changing the rules of the game. This is why the affirmation of IDENTITY is so essential, because it fixes meaning autonomously vis-à-vis the abstract, instrumental logic of networks.

In this complexity, the communication between networks and social actors depends increasingly on shared CULTURAL CODES. If we accept certain values, certain categories that frame the meaning of experience, then the network society will process them efficiently and will return to each one of us the outcome of their processing, according to the rules of domination and distribution inscribed in the network.

